A challenge is an opportunity to prove your ability to yourself and others.

I enjoy the independence you get with EPQ and how you are required to carry out your own research for your chosen project.

However, your supervisor is always there to offer support and guidance to help you develop your project further. I would recommend taking this subject at Carmel, as they offer weekly sessions which help to guide you on how to complete your project efficiently and to the best of your ability. This subject will help me in my next steps after Carmel as it has enabled me to demonstrate project management skills in my University application. EPQ has taught me transferable skills such as resilience as well as time management and research skills which will be extremely useful for my degree and dissertation.

I have thoroughly enjoyed EPQ at Carmel College. I believe it has prepared me well for future life especially at University because of the structure and methods being taught which will undoubtedly come in useful in the future.

EPQ has given me a good insight to what my strengths and weaknesses are when tackling a big project and has really given me in-depth knowledge of a field which I previously had an interest in. The structure and the taught element of EPQ has been especially helpful in learning about the key skills I will need and how to apply them in later life.

What does EPQ involve?
EPQ is also an excellent option for you if you simply have a passion for a certain field and would relish the opportunity of spending time indulging in researching a topic of your choice.
