I hope more people realise the value studying at Carmel has on your life!

"At Carmel I loved film studies way more than I expected to - it taught me so much, not just about film, but gave me lots of cross-overs with the Philosophy and English courses I was doing too. You can learn so much about our society and the world around us by studying media, and film especially.

I now work at the Imperial War Museum at Duxford near Cambridge. I make repairs to old damaged film reels, then scan them at a very high resolution (4K) for preservation purposes, and also to send out to external clients. So if you see any war-time footage on the TV or in a movie - it probably came from us! Our footage was used in the Peter Jackson film 'They Will Not Grow Old', and we have just had a series on Channel 5 about the work we do - just to show off a few of our achievements!"
