My time at Carmel college really inspired me to pursue my passion for philosophy and education further. Throughout my time there, I was well supported by amazing tutors who always encouraged me to fulfil my full potential.

I left Carmel with great results and went on to study Philosophy at the University of Liverpool.

I adored my time at university and my passion for my subject only grew. I met many interesting and talented people who impacted me greatly in my decision to pursue a teaching career.

In 2025, I graduated with a first class degree in Philosophy. In September, I began my teacher training with Teach First. I now work full time as a religious education teacher in Liverpool and adore sharing my passion for the “big questions” with young minds. This year, I will qualify as an RE teacher and continue to teach.
